

Safari and Chrome displayed the fonts with near-identical sharpness, while Firefox rendered some text slightly bolder, particularly in headings. Another notable difference was the input fields and buttons, which appeared uniform in Chrome and Safari, but Firefox added a faint default border to some form elements, slightly altering their visual weight. Lastly, Firefox's hover animations felt marginally slower compared to Chrome/Safari's instant response.